Von Alana Woods Think George Orwells 1984 was a piece of fiction? Think again. In this second in The Barter series John L Work presents for your enjoyment and contemplation a story of the world going mad. The year is 2020. He points out that the United States has gone from being the Worlds biggest creditor nation in 1945 to the worlds biggest debtor nation today. But as he points out in his introduction, This isnt a book about economics. Its a killer thriller. Hes right! Benito and Monica Hernandez from book 1 are dead and we now follow his son Jamie. Private citizens possessing guns was outlawed years ago and there are harsh penalties for non-compliance. Im not giving anything away by saying Jamie buys one so he can pursue his vendetta against the injustice of his fathers death. Im not going to tell you how Benito died but its all tied up in the Chinese now being the behind-the-scenes power in America. Youre going to want to move straight on to book 3 when you finish this one.

KurzbeschreibungAN AMAZON BEST SELLER. In 2020 A.D. Jaimie Hernandez's world is disintegrating. America's sovereignty has been sold. Immense geopolitical circumstances have wreaked havoc on his family and his country. His father was wrongfully executed inside a Chinese prison - in Colorado. His distraught mother committed suicide. He quit his job and he's separated from his wife and children. What is a man in such circumstances to do, in order to re-claim his life and his dignity? In The Barter 2, John L. Work again takes you on a thrill ride through a far too plausible horrific future. KurzbeschreibungAN AMAZON BEST SELLER. In 2020 A.D. Jaimie Hernandez's world is disintegrating. As a uniformed cop, he answered brutal domestic violence calls, high speed chases, homicides, suicides, armed robberies, breaking up bar fights, and the accompanying sporadic unpredictable moments of terror - which eventually come to all police officers. He gradually absorbed the hard fact that the greatest danger a cop faces comes in the form of day-to-day encounters with emotionally disturbed, highly intoxicated people. Those experiences can wear an officer down, grinding on his own emotions and psyche. Prolonged exposure to the worst of people and people at their worst can soon make him believe that the world is a sewer. That police officers reality is a common thread throughout Works crime fiction books. One afternoon in 1976, his cousin, who eventually became the Chief of the Ontario, California, Police Department, talked him into riding along during a patrol shift. The musician was hooked into becoming a police officer. After working for two years as a reserve officer in Southern California and in Boulder, Colorado, he joined the Longmont, Colorado Police. Work served there for seven years, investigating crimes as a patrolman, detective and patrol sergeant. In 1989 he joined the Adams County, Colorado Sheriffs Office, where he soon learned that locking a criminal up inside a jail or prison does not put him out of business. As a sheriffs detective he investigated hundreds of crimes, including eleven contract murder conspiracies which originated inside the walls. While serving on the Adams County North Metro Gang Task Force and as a member of the Colorado Security Threat Intelligence Network Group (STING), Work designed a seminar on how a criminals mind formulates his victim selection strategy. Over a period of six years he taught that class in sheriffs academies and colleges throughout Colorado. His final experiences in the criminal law field were with the Colorado Sate Public Defenders Office, where for nearly two years he investigated felonies from the defense side of the Courtroom. Twenty-two years of observing human nature at its worst, combined with watching some profound changes in Americas culture and political institutions, provided plenty of material for his first three books. Work lives in northern Colorado.
